PERVERSION OF APPETITE. Often Caused by a Disorder of the

There is a very old story told of a hostler who, for economical reasons, cheated his horse into the belief that split shavings were grass by compelling the animal to look through green spectacles while at his manger. It is also related, however, that the beast finally died as the result of the diet. The Poley boy, who voluntarily ate toothpicks for other reasons, was happily saved from a like fate by an operation which resulted in the extraction of a pound and a half of pulp wood from his intestines. As the ordinary boy of eleven is usually satisfied with every-day food, provided he gets enough of it, the case from such a standpoint is worthy of a passing reference, says the New York Herald.

The habit of chewing and swallowing whittlings and slivers of wood to which he had been addicted for months was simply due to a perversion of appetite, which, although quite uncollimon with male youngsters, is not infrequently seen in the opposite sex of like tender years. There is in both instances a marked nervous perversion of instincts, which in the case of the females is generally designated as hysterical. The young miss who masticates her slate pencils or bites her nails is a notable example of the latter type.

We should hardly dare say that such manifestations of error of taste were evidences of mental unsoundness-although it is notoriously true that the disorder in one shape or the other is very prevalent among the inmates of insane asylums. Various articles, such as chalk, bits of mortar, hair, cinders, and even forks and spoons, are surreptitiously swallowed by idiots and mad people.

With seemingly rational individuals the origin of the trouble is not infrequently in the stomach itself, which is often dilated and so disordered in function as to cause a craving for the sense of comfortable distention, which can only be satisfied by bulky and indigestible materials.

Anctic Degs Have to Wear Shoes.

The idea of a dog wearing shoes is generally considered humorous, but up in a far Northefn country, where the ground is covered with ice and snow, and the thermometer from fifty to sixty degrees below zero, shoes are a necessity for the dogs of the dog

In a recent book about the far North the importance of carrying a large supply of shoes for the dogs is dwelt upon.

A dog's foot is very liable to injury on the rough, sharp ice, or nails may be broken. When thus injured the dogs are quite unfitted for work, and speedily let it be known that something is wrong.

An experienced dog will stop and refuse to move until his sore feet are attended to.

A little cotton wool, saturated with balsam gum, is fastened over the wounded part of the foot, then the dog shoe, which is like a long mitten without the thumb, is drawn on the foot, and securely fastened with a piece of deerskir.

It is said that dogs get to be very fond of these shoes, and sometimes resort to queer expedients to get them on. They will sometimes pretend to be very footsore; and if the night be especially cold at the camp, they will howl and whine for them in a way that is pathetic, though at times very laughable. They have also been known to lie down on their backs, and, holding up their four feet howling to have their shoes put on.

Meat and Milk of Angora Goats.

The meat of the young Angora wether is said to be delicious. It has a verison flavor, and is not strong and oily like the flesh of most goats. A New Mexico breeder told the writer that he had it on his table off and on, the year round, and preferred it to the best Southdown mutton. It is already coming into demand among the epicures of the great cities. The man from New Mexico said that although the common goat has been called the "poor men's cow," his uncommon ones were bad milkers and their butter was indifferent. He was not aware that any attempt had ever been made to derive cheese from Angora milk, but, mindful of the fact that the celebrated Roquefort, Mont d'Or, La Sassenage, and Leroux of France and Switzerlandere goat products, said he meant to experiment in this direction. Contrary to his experience of the milking qualities of the Angora goat is that of the South Carolinian who wrote: "In a cross I have made with a pure Augora buck and a Maltese ewe I have raised a doe that will give four quarts a day of as good milk as any cow on my plantation. The feed of one of my nows will keep twelve gosts."-New York Post.

A Royal Architect and Gardener.

Kings are generally supposed to owe their distinction to their exalted pos!tion. It is said of King Leopold of Belgium, however, that if he were not King of the Belgians, he would be a king among architects, or among landscape gardeners.

His taste in these directions is probably more marked than his taste for ruling, for it is well known that he detests the ceremonials of royalty, and is never so happy as when inspecting and correcting designs for a new building or planning the laying out of an

Brussels has much cause to be grateful to him in this respect, since it is to the keenness of his eye for the beautiful in landscape that she owes many of her open spaces from which delightful views of the country can be obtained.

The summer palace of the King and Queen of the Belgians is at Lacken, a suburb of Brussels. It is an estate of about 300 acres, and the park and grounds plainly show the influence of the King's love of horticulture and floriculture. They have been so beautifully laid out that they are the pride and delight of his subjects. The King himself superintended the opening of every glade and the arrangements of every group of trees.

Since the Queen shares with her husband a great fondness for flowers, and since Lacken is her favorite residence, It is not surprising that the conservatories there are said to be the finest private conservatories in the world. They were begun in 1874, and have been added to from time to time since. -Youth Companion's.

"King" of the Newsboys.

"Davy" Stephens of Kingston, Ireland, claims the proud title of the king of the newsboys. His claim is partly based on the fact that he has sold newspapers for fifty-four consecutive years, and partly on the fact that more famous men and women have been among his patrons than any of his rivals can boast. Thirty-nine years ago "Davy" was on the dock when Queen Victoria landed on her first visit to Ireland, and sold her majesty a paper, receiving in pay a gold sovereign. On the queen's visit he was again on hand and again made a sale at the same high figure. Almost every great Englishman of the last half century has bought papers from "Davy" and stopped to chat with him.

Booming Good Roads.

At the recent good roads convention at Orlan o, Florida, "a general spirit of road improvement was reported for Brevard, Bradford, Hillsboro, Lake, Marion and Polk counties." The fact was brought out that "about two hundred miles of bicycle paths" are now in use in Orange county alone. And all the counties named are "thinly settled" and have "sandy roads" and "swampy reads" to contend with.
